

Coastal Carolina Edition August 30, 2008

BY MARK HARRINGTON AND NIRAV DALAL
FightOnState.com Blitz Team

Nirav Dalal: Wow, is it really college football season already? For many fans, the off-the-field discussions have been exhausting and they will welcome the chance to talk about football. The Lions face a Coastal Carolina team that has only been playing football for seven seasons but they have seen considerable success in that time. The Chants have won 15 of their last 17 league games and have won the conference title in 2004, 2005, and 2006. For an FCS team, Coastal Carolina is not the cupcake that most Lion fans are thinking they are.

Mark Harrington: Yeah it seems like yesterday we were talking about spring and the Blue-White Game, but college football is upon us and it's time to turn our sights on Coastal Carolina, a team many PSU fans likely didn't even know existed before they made the Lions' schedule, let alone played football. As you said, Nirav, this is no slouch of a team; they are very familiar with success on the football field and no doubt have sky-high expectations to become the next Appalachian State by knocking off a big time program and hitting the national stage.

Other Big Games This Weekend:

ND: Mark, much has been made about the Big Ten this off season and I think the full slate of Big Ten vs. Pac 10 matchups serve as a real opportunity to help the Big Ten regain some national respect. It won't fix it, but it can help it. The first game kicks off this weekend when the Spartans travel to Berkeley to face the Cal Bears. I really like the Spartan offense and I think Javon Ringer will help them control the ball in this game. I like the Spartans in this one.

MH: Well the season kicks off with a few big games, like No. 24 Alabama at No. 9 Clemson in a Southern showdown. Plus you have No. 20 Illinois heading to No. 6 Missouri in a Midwest melee. I am sure folks will also be keeping an eye on Appalachian State as they head to No. 7 LSU this weekend. Oh and Oregon State, next up for PSU is facing off with Pac 10 foe Stanford.

Upset Special:

ND: Pat Hill has been saying for years that his Fresno State Bulldogs will play anyone, anywhere, and anytime. Well, his out of conference schedule does all the talking for him. This week, FSU travels to New Jersey to face Rutgers. I really like Fresno State in this game. The Bulldogs are not getting the media attention that BYU is, but they are a very good football team that can play with just about anyone. This should be a good game and I like Fresno State to pull it out in the end.

MH: I think Phil Fulmer and his Vols better be ready for Rick Neuheisel and the Bruins of UCLA. Tennessee has to head west to play in the Rose Bowl and if Neuheisel has shown anything over his career is that he can toss out some schematic surprises for big-time opponents. Tennessee has some high hopes at No. 18 at the outset of the season, so we'll see if they can take care of business from day one.

Offense:

ND: Well, the veil will finally be lifted on the "Spread HD" offense and I have feeling that everyone is going to have that "I've seen this movie before" look on their face. The Lions will want to run the ball behind an experience offensive line that some are saying is the best in the conference. Stephon Green has captured the attention of every pundit and fan but I think the steady but successful manner of Evan Royster is what will win the race. Royster isn't very sexy as a runner but he gets the job done. He can run between the tackles and he can run off-tackle. And, for those that don't think he is home run threat, just watch the Alamo Bowl, Quarterback Darryl Clark will take over on-field command of the Nittany Lion offense.

Wisconsin, or Purdue games. The kid has talent even though he doesn't have the 4.3 40-yard dash time.

The Chants were terrible against the run last yielding over 5 yards per carry and over 200 yards per game. The Chants return 8 starters from that defense but their leading tackler, Anthony Steele, has graduated. The defense is definitely experience but I do not think that they can contain the Lion running attack. As a result, I think the Lions will pound the ball right at the Chants until they have put a couple of scores on the board and then they will start to work on some of the other plays from the "Spread HD" playbook.

Darryl Clark was named the starting QB on Tuesday ending the debate on who will start. The Lions will use Pat Devlin this year

Notable:

For the second consecutive season, the Nittany Lions will be hosting five bowl teams from the previous season: Oregon State (Emerald), Illinois (Rose), Michigan (Capital One), Indiana (Insight) and Michigan State (Champs Sports).

Penn State also faces three 2007-08 bowl teams on the road: Purdue (Motor City), Wisconsin (Outback) and Ohio State (BCS).

but it does appear that this is Clark's job to lose. Clark has many options to utilize in the passing game with the return of Derrick Williams, Deon Butler, Jordan Norwood, Mickey Shuler, and the perennial resident of the JoePa dog house, Andrew Quarless. The key for Clark is going to be making his decision and deliver the football quickly. His pass protection should be quite solid behind a strong line. But, the Chants have an excellent Defensive End on their squad. Phillip Oboh is built like a large linebacker and has tremendous quickness off of the edge. It'll be interesting to see how Landolt matches up with him and if the Lions have to place Shuler on that side to slow Oboh down.

In the end, the Lions' offensive line will help them move the ball down the field. As long as the Lions hold on to the football and Clark doesn't try to win the National Championship with each throw, the Lions should light up the scoreboard with relative ease.

MH: If fans are looking for some sort of magical scheme from the "Spread HD," I suspect they will be pretty disappointed. As we have reported all off-season in our FightOnState.com exclusive practice reports, the scheme "is nothing much different" from previous play-calling as Deon Butler told us earlier this week. However, that does not mean the scheme will not have fans pleased. The key to the offensive approach is motion, misdirection and "getting the best personnel on the field for the current situation," as one practice observer told us.

Sounds simple and straight forward huh? Now, I don't expect the coaches to unveil the inner-workings of their preseason practice for Coastal Carolina, unless they have to, but the scheme will see the quarterbacks (Clark to start, Devlin to see action) in the shot-gun and under center with split back sets that motion and shift into the slot, out wide and up inside. Again, don't expect a lot of "razzle-dazzle" this weekend, but they will likely try to get some game work in for fresh faces like Stephon Green and converted safety Chaz Powell who has been seeing some reps in similar fashion to Derrick Williams' role.

The key to the offense is for Clark/Devlin to relax and use the tools and weapons around them. With a veteran offensive line and wideout corp and a dependable running back in Royster, neither has to make big plays, although both may try to in order to continue their campaign for the starting job. They most important part of their job is ball protection and control.

Finally, watch the tight end situation. Andrew Szczerba has great size and a fleet-footed approach to get off the line and make a play. However Paterno all but said Quarless was ready to make his return and was "faster than Szczerba," indicating he was behind the starter and blocking skills of Mickey Shuler. It will be very interesting to see who sees action at TE and how much they toss to them. I have a suspicion when Devlin is in they will likely get Szczerba in the formation since he has become a favorite of Devlin and could help with his comfort level as he takes the first game reps of his career.

Defense:

ND: If the Chants' QB reminds fans of Wally Richardson, it'll be for a very good reason. William Richardson is Wally's kid brother. William had a very solid year last year throwing 13 TDs with 7 INTs and with a 57.1% completion rate. Like his brother, he is tall and strong. He is also quite mobile and is not opposed to running a draw play or taking off when he has nowhere to go with the ball. The Chants like to spread the field out so it gives William plenty of opportunity to tuck the ball and run. However, he and the rest of the Chants will be hard pressed to run against a stout defensive line. Much has been made about the dismissal of Phillip Taylor and Chris Baker but not enough has been made of the return of Jared Odrick and the overall play off Ogbu and Koroma.

The Chants running attack uses short and quick, Eric O'Neil. At 5'10" and 190lbs, the kid is a jitterbug. Last year, he averaged 4.5 yards per carry but his carries were limited thanks to the presence of Mike Tolbert, who is currently playing with the Chargers. It is the running attack that will exploit one of the biggest concerns for the Lions – the quality of a green linebacking crew. With the graduation of Dan Connor and the injury to Sean Lee, Tyrell Sales is the only veteran on this squad. The Lions will rely on Josh Hull, Navorro Bowman, Bani Gbadyu, and Chris Colasanti. It'll be interesting to see how quickly Coach Vanderlinden and Bradley determine who their starting bunch will be for the season. I think we'll see plenty of Sales, Bowman, and Gbadyu. It'll be interesting to see how Hull does and if Colasanti can push him for a shot at the Mike position.

The Lions have some question marks on defense but they should have little trouble getting pressure on William and forcing some turnovers. If the Big Ten had difficulty containing Maurice Evans and Josh Gaines, I don't see the Chants having much luck either.

MH: I expect that William Richardson will step up in the pocket and make some roll outs to keep the defensive front on-guard. Although the defensive line saw the departure of Chris Baker and Phil Taylor, Larry Johnson still has impressive depth to build his rotation from. With Abe Koroma, Ollie Ogbu, Jared Odrick as the base and Chimaeze Okoli and Tom McEowen rounding out the depth, the interior of the line should be formidable.

As for the end situation, with veterans Josh Gaines and Maurice Evans at the helm and backups like Aaron Maybin, Jerome Hayes and Eric Latimore give a nice set of options off the corner, although I would not expect to see a flurry of blitz packages in this clash, watch for some pressure schemes on Richardson.

Nirav, you covered the linebackers pretty well, so I will move on to the secondary. With A.J. Wallace and Tony Davis (back) at corner, the Lions have some good speed on the edges. Toss in Scirrotto and the secondary is pretty solid. The question is the strong safety spot – watch for Mark Rubin to start, but youngster Drew Astorino has seen significant first team reps this preseason. If he can shake off some minor injuries he should definitely get into the mix, which would be important, since he's been called one of the "hardest hitters on the team."

Special Teams:

ND: Last year, the Chants went with two

freshmen for their kicking and punting. One worked out great and one...not so much. Kicker Justin Durham was quite good hitting 12 of 17 kicks including being 4 of 6 from over 40 yards. So, if the Chants can get into FG range, they have a kicker that can nail it. The Lions have proven that they are quite effective in almost all aspects of the kicking game. The big question mark will be if the kick coverage can be better. It has to be. The Lions face an Oregon State team the following week that has one of the best returners, Stroughter, in the country so they need to work on staying in their lanes and making tackles in this game.

MH: My concern is around kicking with Kevin Kelly. He has been "shaky" at times this preseason and needs to get the bugs out through this early out of conference slate. As for the return game, watch for Williams and Scirrotto on punts, with Scirrotto as the "safe," read: fair catch return man. As for kickoffs, Wallace, Williams and Green have seen preseason returns, which gives a lot of speed and could help boost PSU in the battle for field position.

Matchup to Kick Back and Enjoy:

ND: This game is the perfect warm-up for Daryll Clark. He will have a chance to see a defense scheme that will cause him to really think. I think the matchup here is Daryll Clark against himself. Can he make the decisions in a game to help his team make plays and win the game? The Chants have some talent on defense but not enough to push Clark. So, the matchup here is purely mental for Clark.

MH: I think the matchup to keep an eye on is William Richardson against Penn State's front four. He can get outside the pocket and make some plays, and with limited blitzing the ends will have to play containment. If they can get pressure on Richardson it could really pay dividends in some mental mistakes the Lions can capitalize on.

Keys to the Game:

ND: The Lions need to stay focused and need to walk into this game with something to prove. Few have given the Lions much credit as they enter this season. More has been said about their aging coach and off-the-field trouble than their talent on the field. The Lions need to take care of business and finish this game off.

MH: The two keys to this game are ball protection for the short term and experience for the long term. Protect the ball to win the game and get as many young players experience in this clash to help plan for the future slate.

Predictions:

ND: The Chants have really been a solid team since they started playing football and I think they will be a pretty good team in the Big South Conference. But, against an FBS team, they simply can't compete with the talent. This game will start to get out of hand in the 2nd quarter and will Devlin a great opportunity to get some playing time.

Penn State: 51 Chanticleers: 3

MH: The offense will be vanilla and the team will have some early kinks to work out, but this one should be won on the talent gap. This could be worse if they elect to keep the starters in for extra work.

Penn State: 48 Chanticleers: 3

Until next time,
